HOW TO ARRANGE AND PRESERVE CUT FLOWERS.

[illegible]

The art of arranging flowers gracefully and well is not so easily taught as their culture, for it requires an artistic eye to group them tastefully, yet fortunately they are so intrinsically beautiful that they can hardly be spoiled, though the best effect is not always attained.

In our country flowers are chiefly regarded as accessories, while in France and Germany there is no family fete without its graceful door wreathes, its garlands, [illegible] picture-frames and its coronals of flowers, and not a toilette without its appropriate flower.

In arranging flowers it is well to bear in mind the laws of [illegible] work, and when we desire to adorn our rooms with flowers we should consider the "grounding" to be prepared for them, as if it were a cushion.

Pastel flowers are peculiarly lovely when arranged with pale pink roses, etc., but if white flowers are mingled with them the effect is not pleasing. Rose color and pale blue are exquisite when mingled; white lilac or mauve with primrose [illegible] blue with brilliant scarlet [illegible] or cherry [illegible] white, dark purple with primrose, blue, white and rose-color.

The shade of green should as a general rule harmonize with the natural foliage of the flowers. If this is disregarded it will tend to overpower instead of increase the brightness of the flowers. Very dark green looks well with only large, pure tinted, heavy flowers like roses, camellias, dahlias, etc., although it will look well with white flowers of finer structure, if their texture is thick and waxen, and especially with wild flowers of the spring. The leaves of the scarlet geranium preserve many flowers by their velvety texture, which retains so much moisture while their flowers will last well if a drop of gum arabic is dropped into each flower. [illegible] effective [illegible] table decoration.

Carnations and pinks are beautiful for floral decorations, and they keep their freshness for a long time. Verbenas and [illegible] are also very desirable. Hyacinths [illegible] make exquisite [illegible] and [illegible] tulips [illegible]

[illegible] for [illegible] flights, exhibits their striking colors to great advantage, and the gorgeous scarlet, pink, pale blue and white [illegible] into which [illegible] but they require [illegible] of mossy foliage of [illegible] or ferns.

Azalias are charming for every kind of adornment. There are no flowers more perfect for ornamenting the hair and dress, but they fade quickly [illegible] damp [illegible]

[illegible] admirable [illegible] many of them. Sleep [illegible] welcome its snowy waxen fragrant flowers being [illegible] to very [illegible] the same remark applies to the sweet Cape jasmine [illegible] and the orange blossom.

When [illegible] flower [illegible] direction downward, if the spray spring from the [illegible] of the stalk [illegible] as close as possible to the shoot [illegible] if it be a side branch cut it close to the main stalk. Then there will be no outflow of the sap, no [illegible] withering [illegible] protruding their unsightly presence above sickly [illegible] and meagre blossoms, but, on the contrary, a symmetrical growth of verdure and florescence. Use the same method in removing a solitary flower or bud.

One great drawback to our enjoyment of cut flowers is the quickness with which they decay.

The moisture furnished cut flowers should be rain water, [illegible] of a moderate temperature, about blood warmth. The water should not be changed, but every morning its evaporation supplied with more of the same temperature, to which after a few days, a little aqua ammonia—five drops to half a pint of water—may be added. It is well to place at the bottom of the dish or vase a layer of broken charcoal about half an inch deep—pieces about the size of small beans. In placing the flowers, let them have as much room as they need to show themselves naturally. After a few days the stems should be examined, all decayed matter rubbed from them with a piece of flannel, and the tip of each end cleanly cut, and if any leaves or blossoms begin to look withered, those also should be cut away.

Flowers decay much sooner when tied in bunches or bouquets than when arranged loosely. Too little air and too much water are the bane of most species. With most hardy plants even if very long stemmed two inches immersion will give water enough if they have plenty of air.

For short-stemmed flowers a mixture of damp sand and powdered charcoal in equal proportions answers very well, but care must be taken that the dish does not get too dry. The prettiest and best arrangement for keeping cut flowers in beauty is a dish of velvet moss saturated with rain water. When this moss is brought from the woods, if a few fronds of fern, especially those of the delicate maiden-hair, are taken with it, and suffered to form a part of the foliage of the groups, you will find them a charming addition. Place the flower stems sparsely among the moss, and here and there a branchlet of green or a leaf. Just inside the edge of the dish pour a very little water twice a week, and when any of the collection shows signs of decay, remove them, and fill their places with fresh specimens, thus the dish may be kept filled with bloom and beauty for months.

Small bouquets for the hand soon fade if no effort is made to give them moisture, but a wrapping of a bit of wet cotton batting or a few threads of candle-wicking fastened lightly about the ends of the stems will suffice to keep them in good condition several hours in a close, hot atmosphere. Those who do not like the formality of a bouquet-holder, which this plan necessitates, can take a small vial—such as are used to hold medicine, of homœopathists—partly fill it with water, and place the flower stems therein, and then cover the vial by tying a ribbon around it, just as they would the bare stems of a nosegay. Flowers used in decorating the hair and the dress can be kept bright and fresh in the same way.

If flowers are to be transported any distance after they are cut, they should be placed carefully in a tight box. If the box is not perfectly air tight, furnish it with a layer of damp moss or cotton-batting.

Hot water will often revive faded flowers, even when every petal is drooping. Place the stems in a cup of boiling-hot water; leave them in until each petal has become smoothed out; then cut off the coddled ends, and put into lukewarm water. Colored flowers revive sooner than those that are of a creamy whiteness, as the latter turn yellow. [illegible] best adapted to keeping flowers fresh. They will wilt quickly in badly ventilated rooms, especially if filled with tobacco smoke. Each flower as it fades should be taken away, else it will fade the others.

SLEEPLESSNESS.

Insomnia has become a common, hence a vulgar, malady among us Americans—at least to us who breathe the oxygen which the great wastes of wood and water has been garnering up for us for centuries. Heretofore the malady has been confined to the few: they who sleep on pillows of down, to those who have too much brain or to those who have a guilty conscience—so the poets have said.

Now, however, we who have no such distinction, we who have adopted hair mattresses instead of hair shirts, who cannot claim any flattering preponderance of brain and who have not had originality or boldness [illegible] perhaps, to earn a particularly guilty conscience, we [illegible] on fevered pillows, we [illegible] by midnight [illegible] sure of sleep—hours [illegible] spectres of people we have not murdered, [illegible] for sins we have not had the pleasure of committing! We start like guilty creatures from the common [illegible] as if it were the poisoned mouth of Dejanira [illegible] daggers in the air as we sleep; [illegible] felt no such gloomy ostracism [illegible] burning tears [illegible] martyrdom less complete than his—for if our dreams may be believed we are nightly trampled with the [illegible] downward.

From such visions we awake at two o'clock in the morning to pass the rest of the night in gloomy reveries. How all our wasted opportunities rise up and walk before us in their grave clothes! How many sins committed and uncommitted [illegible] out! The naked human soul—always a terrible object, with no drapery of a refinement, [illegible] no apology of affection, no sweet and soothing balm of sympathy—our own unshriven soul stands before us!

Night after night we meet this object, we contemplate it [illegible] and grow woefully tired of the subject. We try philosophy—it proves unavailing; we try memory, and so far as we can govern that recalcitrant slave it serves us well. We summon visions of Switzerland, look again upon the snowy wonders of Mont Blanc, enjoy the bride-like beauty of the Jungfrau, once more count the statues on the pinnacles of Milan Cathedral. These joys of travel last us one, two, many nights; then memory grows restive and will not obey, but brings us rather all that we wish to forget—the [illegible] and disappointments, the failures, the falseness, the poorness of life.

It is no wonder that in the frequency of this universal misery so many people resort to opium and to chloral—that most [illegible] antagonist of the brain, which simply takes a club and knocks its enemy over. The sleep of the chloral is not a natural or a restful sleep. It is rather a removal of the battered and bruised brain into another room where it recovers at leisure to become more frightfully active than before. Opium takes a more deliberate revenge. It gives [illegible] slumbers [illegible] strikes its fangs deep into the moral sense, woos its victim from truth and [illegible] throw back a poor and worthless weed on the shores of time like the poppy, whence it springs, showy and beautiful while it lasts, but falling quickly into a disorganized heap.

"Oh, that one could [illegible] to bed with him!" said a witty preacher. "Oh, that one could be as sleepy in the night as in the day when [illegible]

The physician smiles now when weary women come to them, wiping heavy dews from pale brows, and say:

"I cannot sleep."

"Who can?" asks the physician, wiping his brow.

[illegible] go to Europe."

[illegible] go to Europe? [illegible] sleeps [illegible] in Paris [illegible] water is bad and the people [illegible] his own [illegible] wants to be [illegible] choicest [illegible] flowers, green trees, gushing fountains, wife, children [illegible] favorite [illegible] instruments [illegible] When he gets worn to a skeleton with sleeplessness he goes to Europe and sleeps like a top. Androscoggin.

David Stevens, who has just been committed to Oxford county jail for bigamy, has a record in Lewiston police annals. Two years ago he was found guilty of breaking and entering a Park street stable. Judge Walton gave him a round sentence, and he began duty in Auburn workshop. Soon he fell ill ostensibly, and a lady called to see him. "Who are you?" asked the jailor. "The wife of David Stevens," said she—and was admitted. A few days after another lady called to see him. "Who are you?" asked the jailor. "The wife of David Stevens," replied the woman. "I don't exactly see [illegible] but I suppose it's all right," said the [illegible] jailor and she was admitted. Meantime Stevens was reputed to be ill of consumption, and in course of time he was pardoned out. Now he turns up as a quack doctor, married again in Norway, [illegible]

Investigation of the affairs of the Brunswick Savings Institution shows the bank's condition more favorable than expected, and at present market rates, the assets of the bank would produce about 92 cents to the depositors. Judge Walton intimated that he should issue a decree for a reduction of the bonds to 90 cents on the dollar, in order to enable the bank to go on safely with its business, and to give all the depositors an opportunity to secure their proportion of whatever appropriation there might hereafter be in any of their suspended securities.

WADE HAMPTON'S TALK.

[From the Chicago Inter Ocean.]

Wade Hampton, said to the people of Rockford, "When the war came I obeyed the command of my State as you did the the command of yours." Mr. Hampton states fairly only one-half the proposition. He obeyed the command of South Carolina. But the people of Illinois answered the call of the Nation, a call made to loyal men in South Carolina as well as Illinois. Were the same call made again, would Wade Hampton respond to the State or to the National summons?

Speaking of the outbreak of the war Mr. Hampton said: "What might have been the result had prudence and not passion ruled the hour, it is idle now to consider." Is this the language of remorse or rebuke? Who were the prudent men and who the passionate in that critical hour? Who armed for resistance, and who struck the first blow? Who invited war, and who held back and counselled peace? If Mr. Hampton meant to say that all would have been well had it not been for South Carolina imprudence and passion, why didn't he say it plainly? We should have been glad to credit him with the confession.

Mr. Hampton said to the citizens of Illinois: "I come, fellow-citizens, appealing for peace. We come because it is the highest wisdom to restore peace." Mr. Hampton is an unconscious humorist. This is as good as the story of the old toper pleading with John B. Gough to be temperate. Why make an appeal to Illinois for peace when Illinois is at peace? Why not talk to the South Carolina rifle clubs about the wisdom of restoring peace?

"The very ethics of statesmanship require the restoration of the Union," said Mr. Hampton. Certainly! And statesmen restored it with Mr. Hampton doing his level best against them. The Union was restored, and without Mr. Hampton's aid. "The ethics of statesmanship" require that men like Mr. Hampton be not allowed to experiment again in destroying it.

Mr. Hampton of the present struck Mr. Hampton of the past a fearful blow when he said "It was remarked by Wellington that it is the duty of every citizen to obey the laws of his country, whether right or wrong." How thoughtless Mr. Hampton was when there was need of such a sentiment, and how apt at quotation he is when there is little call for it!

Mr. Hampton has held pledges from Northern Democrats since 1868, and has had a fair knowledge of their plans. Speaking of the excitement incidental to the settlement of the Presidential question, he said: "There were men in the North who were willing to inaugurate another rebellion; who were willing and anxious to produce another revolution." Mr. Hampton means by this to say that in that crisis Southern Democrats played a smaller part than Northern Democrats. And for once he is right. He is also a competent witness.

[The Inter-Ocean should have said that they made a trade with the plenipotentiaries of the in-coming Administration, which they thought more to their advantage than joining the Northern Democrats in another rebellion.—ED. WHIG.]

Mr. Hampton is apt in the sweet phrases of peace. He clutches an ideal harmony by the slack of its trousers, so to speak, and shakes it like a benediction over the heads of his auditors, while the actual and realistic sentiment crouches tremblingly in the back-ground, fearful and suspicious, knowing from experience the difference between glib-tongued promises and sober performance. The Democratic party has acquiesced in the amendments to the Constitution at every meeting they have held for a half-dozen years, and have gone deliberately forth to disregard and violate them. Wade Hampton has already broken half the pledges he made to the President, has driven forth the legally elected Republican members of the State Legislature, has failed in the promises made to maintain the educational facilities for the colored people, and has forced them to organize for emigration. Now he comes up here to preach harmony to a people that never disturbed it; that never interfered with the rights of others, and that have only asked justice and equal rights to all men under the laws. It is the highest compliment to our people that they received Mr. Hampton respectfully, and listened to him patiently.

The Commercial man labors under a feeling of great awe of the prowess of the strategic Pillsbury since the latter boldly read the former out of the Democratic party as an outlaw, and he seeks to inspire us with the same dread, by warning us as follows:

> We would suggest to our neighbor of THE WHIG that he had better cease trifling with the Chairman of the Democratic State Committee. He is a man of infinite versatility of mind and vast resources. When he next steps into the Republican party for a candidate for Governor, there is no telling who may fall into his artful clutches. The ease with which he seduced Chamberlain in 1870, and the readiness with which Williams submitted to the embrace of the late Democratic State Convention, should be a warning to the editor of THE WHIG. Already our chairman has his lustful eye on Blaine, and the sun-struck statesman may be his next victim.

We have had a "weather-eye" on Eben for some years, but he never succeeded in appearing very formidable, and he has never been inclined to try his blandishments on any level headed and straight forward people. Perhaps he could make a counter-plea of the "willingness" of 1870, and we think even he has too much sense to count that as a precedent for dealing with any square-edged Republicans. The epithet in the last sentence above was evidently misplaced, our neighbor doubtless intending to refer pathetically to the shocking manner in which the Maine Democracy have been "sun-struck" in nineteen consecutive summer campaigns conducted on the Republican side under the invincible leadership of Hon. James G. Blaine.

> It is a question of a good deal of interest whether the convention at Worcester to-morrow will meet these issues in a spirit of cordial sympathy with the President in the arduous work he has undertaken, or only of reluctant and distrustful acquiescence. There is one other alternative possible, namely, that of explicit disapproval. —Boston Advertiser.

W-H-A-T? A "question" as to "cordial sympathy," and actual contemplation of such a thing as "explicit disapproval" in Massachusetts! Why, it is enough to take one's breath! The Advertiser and Journal have constantly assured us that the Republicans of Massachusetts were impatient to raise a tremendous and unanimous shout of indorsement of the whole surrender policy which the President declares has benefited Trade. And has the Advertiser really discovered that there are some Republicans even in Massachusetts who believe that Republicans in the late Confederate States have some rights which the Nation is bound to respect and maintain? Really, the old Salem code will have to be invoked against such fanatical disturbers of the "great commercial policy."

THAT PORTRAIT.

The non-appearance of that threatened pen-portrait of Pillsbury, leads to the suspicion that the Commercial man has been "intimidated" by the drubbings given him in the Standard and Argus. His retort seems to have gone no farther than a pronunciamento.—WHIG.

> THE WHIG should not be impatient. This pencil sketching of a portrait is a delicate operation, and cannot be performed unless the subject can sit quiet and in a state of perfect repose. Our Augusta Brother has just passed through a most trying and exhausting campaign. He has been conducting a long and disastrous retreat, and his countenance wears that haggard expression which comes of long deprivation of sleep and nervous excitement. Doubtless the political malice of our genial neighbor would delight in a picture of our Brother Pillsbury as he appears to-day; but be it known, the portrait we propose to sketch, is not for the amusement of Republicans, but to do justice to the Chairman of the Democratic State Committee for the benefit of the Democratic party of Maine.—Commercial.

We do not wish to hurry or interfere with this work of art, but we may suggest that our neighbor could hardly find a more striking phase of Pillsbury's expression than to sketch him as he appeared when denouncing Marcellus Emery as an "Ishmaelite," "a Copperhead," and "a shattered relic of mob violence." We think the Commercial man ought to be able to delineate Pillsbury in that great outburst of loyal indignation, in a manner that would put "Ajax defying the Lightning" down among the second-rate conceptions of art. But such a wielding of the pencil requires nerve, as Pillsbury has already reached for our neighbor's hair, and stands with tomahawk and scalping-knife in hand.

We never said that the President or Cabinet members should be prohibited from leaving Washington for occasional respite and recreation, but the Reform journals with a big R were frightfully severe upon President Grant and his Cabinet on that score; and the famous "order" prohibiting Federal officials from exercising their political privileges has been principally defended on the ground that the Government owns all of their time and they must not use any of it for matters of private or political concern. We do not criticise at all, but, from the Reform point of view, really there is a queer look to this special Washington despatch to the Boston Journal:

> Secretary Evarts left yesterday morning and Secretary Schurz, and Postmaster-General Key yesterday evening to join the President at Louisville. The only representative of the Administration now in the city is Secretary Sherman, and he assigns as the reason for not being at Louisville the fact that his house here is undergoing repairs.

We know how important it is that the President should be able to introduce all the great statesmen of his Cabinet to the people, in order that they may modestly explain how they are Reforming the Government which was so sadly mismanaged by those inferior persons Lincoln and Grant. And then, should we not be glad that Secretary Sherman can find a better excuse for remaining in Washington than the mere requirements of public duty? Besides, he has already lent a hand on the Ohio stump and ought not to further neglect the repairs on his house. Reform is a funny word, but it has a very imposing appearance when you spell it with a big R.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS. The Kennebec Journal says the amendment limiting municipal indebtedness has been adopted by 10,000 yeas to some 6,000 nays, but does not give the detailed vote. It publishes the following recapitulation of the official returns received by the Secretary of State, showing that the amendment requiring the payment of poll-tax as a prerequisite for voting has been defeated by 4,623 majority.

Referring to the Springfield Republican's allusion to Gail Hamilton as "the most brilliant black-guard among women," the Burlington Hawkeye says "the Republican is the only journal in the United States capable of insulting a woman whose only offence is that she has shown herself a more honorable disputant, better informed, better read and better bred than the editor of the Republican."

POLITICAL AND PERSONAL.

Tennessee is about as thoroughly Democratic as the most ingrained Bourbon could wish, and the deficit in the current expenses of the State next year promises to reach $200,000.

According to the Des Moines, Iowa, Register, Judge James, the Democratic candidate for Lieutenant-Governor of Iowa, announces that he is a Democrat of the old-fashioned sort, with no modern improvements, and that, if he could have his way, he would put the negroes back into slavery.

Major A. H. S. Davis, foreman of the Government printing office at Washington, D. C., who has been quite ill at Farmington with hemorrhage of the lungs, is rapidly recovering, and it is thought that perfect quiet will soon restore him to his usual health.

The Boston Herald intimates that Judge Pitman's onslaught on civil service reform was prompted by the fact that his brother was refused a place in the Boston Custom House. But a slight objection to this view is that the Judge never had a brother. Wasn't it his second cousin?—New Bedford Standard.

The Brunswick Telegraph reports that Frederick K. Smyth has been appointed Professor of Mathematics at Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, Pennsylvania; and his brother, George A. Smyth, Professor of Chemistry at the University of Vermont. Both are sons of the late Professor William Smyth, of Bowdoin College.

The Oregon Statesman vindicates Gen. Howard, and wants his newspaper critics in the East to come out and see if they can fight any better than Howard in a country where white soldiers starve and Indians live upon grasshoppers.

The New York Commercial Advertiser says Senator Conkling is the only man who can secure an indorsement of the Administration from the New York Republican Convention, and is the only man who can prevent a resolution being adopted calling on the President to invite some of his Cabinet to resign. In other words, the Advertiser means to say that the convention will represent the Republican party, and Senator Conkling, rather than the Republican party and Mr. Evarts.

The War.
Among the Piano Makers as to whose make of Piano should meet with favor at the Executive Mansion, has at last been settled by Mrs. President Hayes' selection of an excellent BRADBURY UPRIGHT. The new Bradbury was ordered to be placed in the best place in the Executive Mansion—the private Parlor. It is an instrument of great beauty and exquisite tone and workmanship.

UPRIGHT PIANOS!
THE UPRIGHT PIANO is, from its small, compact form and handsome exterior, especially suited to the parlors of many houses where a Square Piano could not conveniently be placed. It is rapidly becoming, if not already the leading Piano for home use. Durability, and staying in tune equal to the square piano.
I have just received some new styles of these very popular instruments, and shall hereafter have them constantly in stock in addition to my usual selection of SQUARE PIANOS.
Always the newest and most improved styles and the lowest prices. Pianos to rent.

TRUE ECONOMY is not in buying the lowest price articles. The best is cheapest. So with the fine cultivated and plantation grown spices imported by Messrs. Pinckney, Jackson & Co., of London and New York. I have just received a shipment of these goods and would specially invite the attention of all consumers to them. These spices are not only absolutely pure, but are without a doubt the finest ever imported into this country. I confidently recommend them as being really of unusual merit.

OBITUARY. Mrs. Mary Matilda Patterson, whose decease is noticed in our obituary column, has been a faithful and devoted teacher in several grades of schools in this city during the past eight years, and endeared herself to her pupils by her kind and pleasant ways, and the interest she took in their studies, and in all things pertaining to their life. She has persevered in her work, even when in feeble health. During the last vacation, she went among friends in Farmington, and seemed to be improving. Quite suddenly she became ill and returned to Bangor about three weeks since, where she has been lingering, peaceful and resigned to her Heavenly Father's will, until the end came.

OLDTOWN. Mr Editor: A very enjoyable affair in the shape of a bean bake under the auspices of the Good Templars came off in Oldtown last Saturday evening. Mr M A Austin Republican Representative elect from Milford and Worthy Chief of [illegible] Lodge I O G T [illegible] the generosity of his heart invited the Lodge to meet [illegible] grove a mile above the village to partake of a baked bean supper [illegible] expense. Accordingly the members of the Lodge with a few invited guests to the number of nearly one hundred ladies and gentlemen repaired thither in boats [illegible] up the river enlivened by [illegible] conversation and music [illegible] Arriving at the grove we found the place presided over by Messrs Stuart and Hall and it is said the skill of the former in the culinary line [illegible] excelled. After inviting the company to be seated Mr Stuart called Mr Austin to the chair. After a short speech which was listened to with interest he called upon A P Bickmore poet of the evening who delivered an original poem. It was short but very comprehensive and was enthusiastically applauded and a repetition called for. Mr Stuart then announced that supper would be served to which all did ample justice. The beans, coffee, and pastry provided by the ladies, proving excellent in quality and quantity. After all had partaken an hour or more was spent in social conversation interspersed with singing. As the company was about to break up it was proposed to make this gathering a regular yearly organization and the following officers were elected: M A Austin President, A P Bickmore Secretary, Sallie Conant, Ass't Secretary, John [illegible], Historian and J T Stuart Superintendent of the beans. A vote of thanks was then given to Mr Austin and the officers for J L Stuart in appreciation of the satisfactory manner in which he had cooked and prepared the supper and about 11 o'clock the the company proceeded to the boats and returned home expressing themselves highly pleased with the evening's entertainment.

PENOBSCOT AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY

First Day of the Fair. A Glance Through the Hall—List of the Entries Made up to Noon Yesterday

The first day opened yesterday morning at Orono under rather unfavorable circumstances [illegible] having set in at six in the morning which continued with slight intermissions during a part of the forenoon. At eight o'clock however the rain having [illegible] the town's people began to carry their fruit and grain [illegible] to the hall, which soon presented a very busy and lively appearance. Mr Burr the obliging Secretary and [illegible] were ready to note down the entries and assign places to exhibitors. This continued during the forenoon, and [illegible] the clouds having cleared off and the sun shone out bright and beautiful, the entry clerks had all they could attend to for hours.

On entering the hall our reporter found two long tables extending the full length of the hall, one upon each side and well filled with fruits. Between these and the walls were settees arranged for garden vegetables and these were filled also. Two other rows of settees facing each other extend the full length of the hall and were filled with squashes upon one side and potatoes, carrots, beets, turnips, etc., etc upon the other. In the centre of the hall floor is another row of tables upon one end of which are the varieties of grain sent by Hon Geo Brackett of Minneapolis, a former resident of Orono and shown by P D Webster Esq, as stated in these columns yesterday. The exhibit shows wheat in the various stages of preparation for manufacture into flour that was grown upon the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and that grown in other counties of the State, also the flour and middlings in their several grades. A careful examination of this exhibit will show any one how easy it is to have good or poor flour as the manufacturers may wish, provided he has good grain to begin with. The difference in expenses is not excessive, and in manufacturing the best flour all parts of the grain may be utilized. Mr. Brackett deserves credit for his thoughtfulness and enterprise in making so fine an exhibit. Other samples of wheat grown in this county are shown and to your reporter appeared to be of as fine quality as any shown in the hall.

The exhibit of potatoes, squashes and other garden vegetables is very fine indeed and will convince any casual observer that there is no need of anybody's going hungry in this county if a plentiful supply of the choicest vegetables will appease his hunger. A large squash weighs 97 pounds and the owner came upon it yesterday in his grounds while hunting for table squashes and though so large he was not aware of its being on his grounds. Particularly fine Hubbards, Turban and Marblehead squashes are shown from the College [illegible], some of which are very large and all grown and quite ripe. The lot of potatoes shown by Mr. Madden as grown [illegible] seed imported from Ireland last Spring are very beautiful to look upon, and resemble some [illegible] in appearance the well known [illegible]. Of flowers there is a very [illegible] and large variety, and the ladies [illegible] to have taken special pains and care [illegible] make the exhibit show off well. Large [illegible] were sent up from this city and a large part of the day was spent in properly arranging them in the vases, and upon the [illegible] is upon the stage. A beautiful floral [illegible] are arranged by Mrs. Wm. Marden of Orono, from her own garden's growth, attracted attention of every one visiting the exhibition and was greatly admired, not only for the intrinsic beauty of the individual flowers, but for the artistic skill and taste displayed in the make up of the figure. MARY ANN'S MIND.

BY ROSE TERRY COOKE.

The lobster loves the lobster pot,
The mackerel loves the sea,
And I, I love but thee, Mary Ann;
Mary Ann, Mary Ann, Mary Ann,
Mary Ann, Mary Ann, I love but thee!

Jake Hazard shouted this snatch of sea song at the top of his pleasant voice, as he pushed his old whale boat off the beach on the reluctant rollers, and at last launched her in the water.

"That's tellin', ain't it?" inquired Hosy Long with a comic cast of his eye across the boat at Jake, as he shoved at her other side with brawny shoulders and deep breaths of effort.

"Haw, haw!" roared Jake. "Ain't you smart, Hosy? I 'xpect you can see through a millstone 's quick 's the next man!"

Hosy grinned horribly, he was not a brilliant creature, but he could catch fish better than any man on the shore, and when you go blue fishing that's the sort of company you want.

Now, everybody in Sandy Creek knew Jake Hazard was mortally in love with Mary Ann Tucker, he made no secret of it and she, being a born coquette, treated Jake in cat and mouse fashion, till he was as nearly crazy as a hard headed young fellow with no nerves and a mighty digestion can possibly be. If I said Mary Ann was the prettiest girl in the town, I should do her great injustice; for she was the only pretty girl there; the two or three tanned, freckled, good-natured daughters of the Hazards, and Tuckers, and Conklins, who were "the girls" of Sandy Creek, never pretended to be pretty; they went their way in peace, dug clams, baked short-cake made chowder, and darned stockings, undisturbed by lovers or rivalry, in due time somebody married them, because everybody couldn't marry Mary Ann, and thereafter they lived their lives out as they ought, but at Mary Ann's feet sooner or later, every young man in the town bowed down and fell.

She was a very pretty girl. Her long, thick hair, of the darkest richest red, waved in great loose ripples to her knees when it fell out of the heavy braid in which she wore it. Her skin was fair beyond all tanning, and if it was a little freckled nobody saw it in the abundant and lovely color of her rounded cheeks. A low, wide forehead, a dimpled chin, a saucy nose, full scarlet lips, and a pair of wicked, laughing, dark eyes, with lashes and brows of deep brown-red, make up a fair catalogue of charms.

And then she was "everlastin' smart." Nobody kept so clean a house as she did for her father, nobody made such sea pie, chowder or clam fritters. She fried fish to such crisp perfection that the light house people always wanted to stop at Sam Tucker's when they had city company and took them out fishing, but Miss Mary Ann did not approve of "keepin' tavern," she said, so the light-keeper had thereafter to fry his own fish. Then she was exquisitely neat; a virtue rare among a fishing people familiar with the unsavory produce of their nets, as heads, tails or shells lie about the doors, flavorous if not ornamental, till the very hen's eggs have a fishy flavor. But Sam Tucker's door step was always swept of every grain of sand or bit of refuse. Two little posy beds boarded up against the wall sweetened the air with pinks, sweet basil, and a very few hardy roses in their season; there was a scrupulously white bit of curtain across every little window, and the well-scrubbed floors had bright rugs here and there where foot of man might rest, and save the planks needless stain or spot. If the curtains were old cotton or bits of sail cloth, they were still snow white; and that the rugs were braided rags, scarlet shirts worn beyond any more patching, or the remains of a bright blue petticoat, or a gray vest, and black list which the tailoress gave away, did not make them less gay and tasteful of that.

Old Sam's clothes were patched with such neat patches, the buttons so invariable, the red shirt always so bright, that he was a matter of wonder and admiration all along the shore. And if Mary Ann did her house work and scoured her tins and floor, and weeded her posy bed, protected by a big coarse blue apron and a slat-sided sun-bonnet, when the apron came off, and when she sat down to knit or sew, or strolled on the beach in the afternoon, then she was always arrayed in a neat and pretty calico gown, or a deep blue gingham; always some white thing about her throat, not the least shape of fashion, to be sure, but a clean and pure ruffle, or a queer old collar starched out to perfection, or a strip of coarse lace tied in such a trim bow. When you capped this full, wholesome figure and clean attire with the beautiful, saucy, rosy face, shining under a wide black straw hat that Sam Tucker bought for his "gal" years ago in Boston, half with an idea that it was respectful in her to have "a black bonnet," as he called it, because her mother was dead (poor woman, she had been dead six years then,) and half because, having seen a very pretty girl at White Rocks, where he went every year to take out sailing parties, with just such a hat, he thought Mary Ann would become it—then, though you did not see a Broadway belle, you saw a wonderful pretty girl, especially when the old black hat was set off by a plume of grass from the salt marsh, a cluster of pink wild roses, a string of glittering yellow shells, a garland of gay sea-mosses, or a pompon of such golden-rod put in with an artistic effect that a French milliner's fingers might have longed to imitate and longed in vain. Moreover the girl had a good straight form of her own; there was room in the shapely chest for a cheery, ringing voice that was the delight of old Sam as it trolled the quaint songs of the fishermen or a good loud Methodist hymn, and her strong arms, if they were not white, were both round and dimpled.

No wonder Mary Ann had so many lovers. Perhaps no wonder that she did not choose one. It is pleasant as well as provident to have a good many strings to your bow, and when Jake Hazard had to go blue fishing in earnest, not for fun, and she did not want to be crowded with dead fish and wet lines, and two or three men, into a dirty boat all day long, there were always Joe Tucker and Ephraim Conklin to go after berries with her, or some other Conklin, or Tucker, or Hazard to take her crabbing, or shoot peeps for her, rewarded thereafter by a supper of crabs, or peep pie, savory meats which Mary Ann perfectly understood preparing. So she really never seemed to care about marrying anybody. She had her father to look after, and time enough to enjoy her youth, her beauty and her adorers. But all this profited the adorers nothing. She eluded any grasp that might fix her anywhere, like a sagacious swallow that will wheel and flit about your head if you sit still enough, but if you move hand or foot darts off into space with a derisive twitter, and is seen no more. So the lovers gradually dropped off. They would have given their very best possessions to move her careless heart, but it was evident that the inducements they could offer were useless. They were practical beings, men wanting a home and a wife to keep the home and them tidy and thrifty. Sentiment being put out of the question, they turned to the creed of "the fat-faced curate Edward Bull:"

"A pretty face is good, and this is good
To have a dame indoors that trims us up,
And keeps us tight,"

finding plenty of good honest girls in the scattered village, less coy and scornful than the beauty of Sandy Creek. But Jake Hazard remained faithful; his nature was strong and true. The quips and cranks of his fun and good-humor were but a crest of foam bells on a forceful and persistent depth, a constant and mighty tide setting towards one shore. Perhaps Mary Ann did not perceive this fact; perhaps she thought him gay and careless, as young men are apt to be. It certainly never crossed her mind, as a real and earnest question, whether she meant to marry Jake, or even if he meant to marry her, but on his part the matter was thoroughly settled, though till to-day he had never spoken of it. Perhaps it was a brilliant day, for it was June, and the air was vivid with sky above and sea below, and the cool salt breath of the ocean inspired even languid lungs and fainting vitality like a powerful elixir. The great green waves reared up along the shore, shaking white crests of foam in splendid defiance, and dashing their mighty length upon the sand, crumbling back with a hissing crush of ten thousand tiny bubbles on their line, only to rise and charge again with swing, and roar, and crush, till the shore trembled. Outside the long waves swung the old whale boat up and down with mad delight. The blue fish leaped at the bait with eager, venomous heads, and tore and plunged when they felt the hook, showing such fight, that it was keen sport to draw them, gleaming and jumping, through the water and over the gunwale, and throw them onto the glistening heap that already covered the bottom. Jake's grey eyes glowed with excitement, the blood rose to his tanned cheek, his white teeth showed set and firm, under the half-opened lips, and his swaying muscular figure would have been a study for an artist.

"Gingerl this 'here's sport, ain't it?" sung out Hosy Long.

"Pretty good, pretty good!" Jake shouted back to him, setting his teeth together in a short, sharp contest with the biggest blue fish of the haul, who in another minute lay flapping and bouncing at Hosy's feet.

"Dang it all! that's a'most monstrous fish, Jake."

"That's a sockdolager, old feller."

"Well, naow" said Hosy, keeping the boat trimmed carefully while Jake rebaited his line, "that are one would be tasty for supper, I tell you, briled on the coals, 'nd buttered up, long o' some good short cake 'nd some store tea."

Hosy paused and gloated on the fine fat fish with blinking eyes and broad, red face, that was the picture of good humor. Then he took to speech again:

"Ef you'd got an old woman, now, Jake, to your house, I 'xpect you 'nd me would have a fust rate supper on one line, wouldn't we?"

"I reckon," answered Jake, feeling on his taut line to see if it were stretched by the ebbing tide or a pulling fish.

"An' what's more, Hosy, I'm goin' to hev a house 'n home afore I'm gray, I tell ye."

"Lor, now! you be? What does Mary Ann say to thet sarcumstance?"

"She's got to say somethin' afore long. I'm tired o' foolin'," muttered Jake between his teeth, giving a vicious jerk to his line, that was raging up and down at the mercy of another fish, which, however, he speedily hauled in and added to the flapping heap. "I say Hosy, 'taint no good to flounder round on a hook. I'd get off on't ef I tore my jaw out, soon's I found 'twas for sport folks was ketchin' me; bizness is another matter."

"Wall, wall, she's a young cretur. Mebbe she dono what she wants."

"That ain't my sitovation, by the Lord, sir, I know what I want enny way, and I'll hev it or let it go, smack and smooth, afore a new moon comes agin, or my name ain't Jake Hazard."

Hosy's simple soul quivered at the stern and almost fierce energy of Jake's declaration. Not that he was afraid himself, but he saw breakers ahead as he would have phrased it, storms of passion and excitement, an end to quiet fishing bouts with Jake, lazy, pleasant strolls after blue-berries with Mary Ann, and cosy suppers at Sam Tucker's. He was an ease-loving, weak-kneed brother, ready to sell what he called his soul at any time for peace or pottage, the very type of man who wrecks his own life and ruins others for the want of a little courage and candor, whose cry was always the selfish howl of "Let me alone!" "after me the deluge." But Hosy's lazy longing for peace could work no wreck or woe in Jake's affairs, though he made a feeble effort to "save the pieces" in an interview with Mary Ann that very night, being deputed, as soon as they came in with their spoils, to carry the big fish up to Sam Tucker's as a present from Jake. Mary Ann met him with beaming eyes.

"Well, I declare, that's jest what I wanted, for Aunt Semanthy's comin' to supper, 'nd Uncle Royal, and I hadn't a special thing for 'em, bread 'n butter, 'n sass, 'n dried halibut, that's all."

"This is the king o' the crowd," said Hosy, looking at the beautiful silver-bellied blue-backed creature with honest admiration.

"I guess he made 'em fly down below. He come up with a rush now, I tell ye, but Jake was too much for him. Jake's a masterful critter as I ever see. Say, Mary Ann," and here his voice fell into an ominous whisper, "you look out for Jake! Counsel with me now. Ef I be a poor feller I've got sense into me. You let Jake hev his head gineroly. 'Twill be a vast better for you ef ye do."

"What air you a talkin' about, Hosy Long?" retorted Mary Ann with an air of genuine astonishment.

"Oh, nothin', nothin' much, nothin' pertikler, only ef I was you I wouldn't be the one to get athwart of Jake's hawse, not ef—"

"I'd jist hev you know, sir," snapped Mary Ann the quick color rising, angry and brave, in her glowing cheeks, "I'd jist hev you to know that Jake Hazard's nothin' to me, nor I ain't going to cotton to no man because he's masterful. I guess I can be masterful myself if I'm a mind to so there." With which shake of her flag she slammed the door in Hosy's face, and that dejected being bewailed himself plaintively enough.

"Oh, Lord! I've gone an' done it now, ef I never did afore. I hope to glory 'n goodness she won't never tell Jake. I'm darned to thunderation ef I don't believe she will! Oh, Jerusalem!"

And Hosy betook himself to the fish houses, catching his scanty poll ruefully as he went, but resolved to say nothing to Jake, and to deny everything he might be asked thereafter with wholesale and persistent denial.

Yet after all he had done Jake an unconscious service, for Mary Ann was fully and fairly brought to ask herself of what she had just now said in her sudden anger was really the truth. Suppose Hosy told Jake what she did say, and he took it for granted that she really did not care for him at all. It was a small point to rankle in Mary Ann's mind, but it was the point of a wedge. She cooked the big blue fish for supper with her usual skill, and while its crisp brown surface and creamy flakes of flesh were being disposed of with sundry flattering remarks both to fisherman and cook, she fretted inwardly a little, while she was pleased enough with the commendations.

But Mary Ann was not metaphysical—there are some benefits after all in a want of education, if you do not want to analyze your emotions and take your "inwardness" to pieces as a botanist does a flower, you are spared much futile speculation into profitless subjects, much soul-wearying and unhappy consciousness, and may live and die even as a blossom in simple trust and peace. Mary Ann went about her work with no special self-torment after the first uneasy idea of Jake and his possibilities had entered her mind. If she thought of him a little oftener and remembered what Uncle R'yal had said about "them Hazards," as a family, and how Aunt Semanthy had echoed "Yis, they're dreadful reliable folks, allers was; Gran'ther Hazard was one of the smartest men ever I see. Good for fishin' 'bout to ninety years old; spry as a cricket; didn't hev no sickness so to speak durin' his life-time, an' died of a shockanum palsy to the last." Why all this was what she knew before, so she tho't no more about it the next day, but hurried her work over, and putting on her hat, took a basket and set her face inland toward a hill where wild strawberries grew thick and sweet. There was a long walk before her across the fields, and the sandy lanes were too heavy to choose as a path when the short turf lay crisply in the lots, so she stepped over the low wall of loose stone, and thereby came within range of Jake's vision just as he dragged his boat up the beach, having been across the bay to the light-house.

LETTER CARRIERS.

All letters are delivered free by carriers when addressed to street and number. People should inform their correspondents of above and have their letters addressed accordingly.

Persons leaving their address at the General Delivery can also have their letters sent, but it is much more convenient to have the street and number on, and they will be delivered earlier than if the same is put on at the office. Carriers make two deliveries daily, the first trip supplying the extremes of their routes.

Collections are made morning and evening in season for important mails—the down town boxes fifteen and the uptown boxes thirty minutes before closing mails at the office.

Holidays the Carrier's Window will be open for the delivery of letters from 8½ to 9½ A. M., and from 3 to 8½ P. M. Sundays from 9 to 9½ A. M.

Any irregularities in the Carriers' department should be reported to the office.

ENVELOPES.

No additional charge will be made for printing the name and request to return, across the left hand upper corner of the envelopes furnished by the Post Office Department, (samples of which may be seen at the Cashier's window,) when ordered in lots of not less than 500.

A request for the return of a letter to the writer, if unclaimed within thirty days, or less, written or printed, with the writer's name, post office and State, across the left end of the envelope, on the face side, will be complied with.

☞ The public are earnestly recommended to procure stamped envelopes with printed return request, as the expense is less, and letters thus endorsed, if not delivered to the person addressed, are returned to the writer free of charge.

First class envelopes of above furnished at $32 50 per thousand.

Stamps cut from Stamped Envelopes cannot be used to prepay postage. The use of such Stamps is punishable by a fine of fifty dollars. Stamped Envelopes, spoiled in directing, are redeemed at this office.
